Noah's Ark

16281 Ep/CD - Release Date: 9/13/05

Goco Rosie is the Casady sisters, Bianca and Sierra. Born in different states, the girls grew up apart until fate brought them together again in 2003: once disconnected, now inseparable.

in a dusty barn in the Camargue, hand rolled ciggies, whiskey, tea in the morning, tea in the afternoon, tea at night...

Since the mysterious and beautiful La Maison de Mon Rêve surfaced in early 2004, Goco Rosie has lived a nomadic ex Devendra Banhart, and Blonde Redhead.

peeing in a jar, crawling to bed in the wee hours of the morn, squealing kittens, chased by the cries of Ebu the friendless owl...

Along the way, Noah's Ark began to breathe. It happened anytime, anywhere, everywhere: in a barn in France, at their home in B anything from prehistoric recording methods to more modern techniques.

in echoless bedrooms on different continents, in janky studios littered with coffee cups and pubes, and in regular places with mundane objects and mundane machines.

Heart-offerings of friends, family, loved ones and lost ones surface gracefully throughout Noah's Ark, contributing depth to the narrative journey. A mother's chant, a nephew's cry. Antony's angelic falsetto floating across "Beautiful Boyz." The texture and flow that French MC and beat boxer Spleen adds to "K-hole," "Bisounours" and more.

we've been chasing ghosts of sunken pianos in our sleep and the tea stained echo of our grandmothers' native chant...

Noah's Ark is the result of a rootless reality, a drifting consciousness across state lines, date lines, time lines...connected to the past, vague about the future. But the heart of these songs is always issued from a tender present.

imagine cartoons in black and white of female fish batting their eyelashes and belting out tiny love songs in bubbles, crickets and frogs and jets go by, fireworks erupt in a trailer park on the fourth of july...the apocalypse is near.
